

Raised on 60's and 70's rock'n'roll, three very young sisters from Pittsburgh made a musical promise that would determine their future - to become a relevant, popular music act. Now in their early 20's, wading the waters of the music business as teenagers allowed Julia, Sarah and Amber to reach a musical and business maturity beyond their current years.

While an integral part of the tween music explosion, this pop rock threesome contributed to 12 Disney Compilations, released 2 albums and performed for millions of fans opening for the Jonas Brothers and on tours with Disney teen superstars The Cheetah Girls and Miley Cyrus.

"We grew up performing in random places; from churches to bars to parties to festivals. We always had to gauge our audience and learn what they would respond to. The tours helped us perfect that, how to perform for hundreds of thousands of kids, parents and teens all at once and still capture them individually." - Sarah

At the conclusion of 2007 Everlife found themselves at a crossroads - although "family-friendly", their songwriting and musical and writing style was maturing - reflecting their experiences as young women rather than tweens.

Spending their time writing, performing charitable tours in Germany with the USO for our soldier's children, creating and promoting their own Christmas tour, organizing and headlining a 2 month tour through 8 countries in Europe and independently producing a new 4 song EP, the girls focused on developing their musical prowess and defining, together, exactly what kind of band they are. Julia, Sarah, and Amber have now emerged as beautiful young women with amazing musical stories to tell. Their resulting balanced and positive view of life and classic pop rock style resonates with their peers and will capture your heart.

"After unexpectedly having to self-manage, we were thrown into really figuring out who we were as Everlife. We realized we're always telling stories, writing about the things we know and hoping to inspire people in their lives." - Amber

"We want our music to resonate with people. To showcase what we love, a mix of faith, harmony and sticking to our roots in rock'n'roll." - Julia

Remaining true to their "family friendly" core and keeping the pact the sisters made as children, Everlife has become a group of unquestionably savvy businesswomen and musicians. Although their new journey has just begun, their timeless music, harmonious vocals and deeply honest lyrics prove Julia, Sarah and Amber truly have come of age.
